Soldiers Fire Into Large Crowds of Workmen on Streets.

SIXTY-TWO KILLED.

Many Women and Children
Fall Before the Murderous Bullets.

Warsaw, May 1.—Nearly one hundred persons were killed or wounded in the disturbances at various quarters in Warsaw today. The troops were apparently uncontrollable and violated all orders to act with moderation. They fired into crowds of demonstrators, and the workmen, in retaliation, resorted to the use of fire arms and bombs. Many women and children are among the dead and dying.

What approaches a reign of terror exists tonight. The temper of the entire community augurs ill. Glorious weather ushered in May day and the streets were crowded. No untoward incident was reported until afternoon when a procession of several thousand workmen, carrying red flags, marched along Zelazna street. The demonstration was quite orderly and proceeded without molestation for some distance. Suddenly several squadrons appeared and took up a position along the sidewalks while the workmen passed through the lines. The company of infantry approached from the front and immediately the cavalry charged into the procession driving it with the flat of the sword into a disorganized mass. When the cavalry withdrew the infantry fired a volley, whereupon the demonstrators turned and fled. The infantry continued to discharge volleys into the retreating and shrieking multitudes.

Thirty-one persons were killed and many wounded, and of the latter it is believed fifteen will die.

The shooting was quite unprovoked, and aroused the most intense indignation among all classes.

Another terrible scene was enacted later when the workmen fired from behind a wall at a patrol, which immediately opened fire on passing crowds, killing or wounding twenty persons.

The first bomb throwing occurred at 9:35 tonight when a bomb was thrown into a Cossack patrol.

Three Cossacks and one policeman were killed and two women were severely injured.

The Cossacks and infantry fired a number of volleys and it is reported many persons are killed or wounded. It is impossible to secure accurate information as to the casualties of this affair.

There were many other disturbances and a number of other people killed.

Today's bloodshed is likely to seriously effect the situation and may cause a general strike.

The services will continue for one week with a meeting at the Tabernacle at night and a morning service at the Ninth Street Presbyterian church.

HEAVY SALES

Of Tobacco on the Local Market This Week.

The tobacco business on the local market is beginning to boom, both receipts and sales being heavier this week than for some time past. About fifty thousand pounds of the weed was disposed of on the loose floor Tuesday and prices were fully up to those obtained last week. The following quotations fairly represent the Hopkinsville market for the loose weed at present: Trash, $2.75 to $3.25; lugs, $3.50 to $4.75; common leaf, $5 to $5.50; medium leaf, $5.75 to $6.75; fairly good leaf, $7 to $8. Casks receipts have been good this week and it is estimated that about four hundred hogsheads arrived. We were unable to obtain the exact number, however, before going to press last evening. It is calculated that the number will be considerably increased by today's deliveries. The warehouses are filling up steadily and stocks will soon be large.

Receipts at the Association warehouses are very heavy and increasing every day.

The index finger was cut entirely off and hurled to Elmo, where Dr. Alexander amputated the hand and he was getting along quite well at last accounts.

HONEY BEES.

Large Swarm Captured By North Main Resident.

A very large swarm of bees, presumably from the country, "settled" on a limb of a shade tree in the yard of one of Mr. L. Yonts' lots on North Main yesterday. The bees clung to the limb, which hung over the sidewalk, and were removed into a hive belonging to a tenant. For half an hour the pedestrians gave that side of the street a "wide berth." It was the largest swarm seen here for a long time, and would have filled a half bushel measure.

FOUND DEAD IN THE SHAFT

BY WALTER FENTON.

"Good by, my son, good by. My earnest prayers shall be offered up for your soul's welfare," said good Father Veigh, the aged priest, as he pressed the hand of a young man who occupied the condemned cell in Walworth jail.

The prisoner muttered an indistinct farewell, and then the heavy door closed upon the retreating form of his spiritual adviser, and the doomed man was alone. He remained for a moment standing close by the closed door, and then, with a weary sigh, he crossed the narrow cell, and sat down upon the side of his couch.

"Oh, God! he cried, in a voice of despair and anguish, "must this terrible crime be committed—must I die upon the gallows for a crime of which I am innocent? Oh, is there no escape, no way in which my innocence may be proved? My God! my God! I shall go mad! My wife—my young wife—oh, Jove! Heaven! what will become of her? To die, to look no more upon the face of her whom I love, who but two short weeks ago became my bride! Nevermore to see this fair earth—nevermore, nevermore!"

The prisoner buried his face in his hands, and again repeated the words "nevermore, nevermore," with a wailing, moaning modulation that was inexpressible sad. For some time he remained thus, but finally he arose, and began to pace the limits of his prison with rapid, nervous strides. His head was bowed, and his eyes fixed upon the floor. Presently he paused as though he had come to some determination, or had resolved upon some act, and again seating himself upon the side of his cot, he drew from its concealment a vial. Holding it up he gazed upon the label and read aloud:

"Prussic acid." Is it not best that I should meet death here alone in my prison cell, rather than face my public ignominious doom? A drop of this colorless liquid will end my troubles here, but what comes after life closes? Oh, that I could but look beyond the veil; that I could but know the fate of the soul of him who by his own act sends his spirit into the presence of his Maker. I hesitate, for I cannot solve the sublime mystery of death, and I cannot face the unknown terrors of that future to mortals never revealed. To-morrow I am doomed to die. When the sunlight of another day shall gild the east, life ends for me. Oh, can I not gather courage to anticipate the few brief hours that are left me?"

Thus the condemned man mused, and he still held in his hand the vial of deadly poison. He was striving to determine upon an awful act, and his features worked nervously, while his eyes were fixed upon the vial with a fascinated gaze. What must be the condition of mind of him who takes his own life? What a ghastly gleam of what abnormal disorganization of the mental faculties must take place ere man becomes a self-murderer—a suicide.

Poor Albert Rauhen must at this time have been irresponsible for his acts; for we cannot think that a sane man ever becomes a suicide. That all mankind dread death is as true as the old Latin proverb, "mors omnia vincit"—death is common to all—and insanity alone overcomes this natural fear. Suddenly the young man sprang to his feet, and glanced wildly about his cell, as though he feared that he was watched, and when satisfied that no one observed his act, he drew the stopper from the vial.

"I will do it!" he muttered. "Yes, yes, I will swallow the poison—it will spare my wife and friends the disgrace of my being hanged! God forgive me if I sin and have mercy on my soul!"

He raised the vial to his lips. In another instant he will drain the fatal draught to the very dregs. Oh, if he only knew what— But we must not anticipate.

That the reader may clearly comprehend what follows, we will briefly relate the circumstances of the crime of which the young prisoner, Albert Rauhen, was convicted.

Several months previous to our opening scene, William Redmond, the "mine boss" at the great

Moose mine, had discharged a miner by the name of Saul Kayth, and the morning since ending the day on which he had discharged this man he went down the shaft very early before any other person had descended except Albert Rauhen. The duties of the latter required him to be the first in the mine; he was the "foot-tender," which is the name applied to the person who runs the cars on and off the carriages at the bottom of the shaft.

When William Redmond reached the "foot" he found Albert Rauhen at his post, and directed him to go to the mule stable, which was in a distant part of the mine, and ascertain that all was right there. Albert Rauhen obeyed, and when he left him, William Redmond was seated upon a post of the shaft of a mine lamp.

Rauhen had been absent from the "foot" but a few moments, when a man stepped out from behind a pillar where he had concealed himself. At the sound of other's footsteps Redmond looked up quickly, and to his surprise saw Saul Kayth. The lamplight fell full upon his face, and Redmond saw that the man looked angry and fierce. The thought came to his mind:

"How came this man here? I was told by the engineer that no man except Rauhen was in the mine."

"Mr. Redmond," said Saul Kayth, "will you let me have my old place back?"

"No," answered the mine boss, firmly. "I will not. You can't have work in this mine again. How come you here?"

"I don't know that that is any of your affair," answered the man.

"Very well. I see you are inclined to be insolent. Leave the mine at once. You can pull the bell-rope, then jump upon the car, and you will be raised by means of the engine to the surface of the earth. Never come here again!"

"You are boss here, and I suppose I must do as you say," replied Kayth, meekly, "but by and by I shouldn't wonder if there'd be a change."

With this remark Kayth stepped back a pace or two, and then, with a movement as sudden and unexpected as the act could be executed, he bounded upon the surprised mine boss, and dealt him three terrible blows upon the head with a heavy piece of iron coupling. William Redmond sunk back upon the earth dead, for his skull had been fractured in three distinct places.

The assassin gazed for a moment upon his victim, and then, as he heard the retreating steps of Albert Rauhen, a devilish thought occurred to him; he would fasten the crime upon that innocent man.

He hated Rauhen, and his malice would in this way be gratified, and at the same time his own connection with the crime would be concealed.

He took Rauhen's coat from a bench upon which its owner had carelessly thrown it, and deliberately dabbed it in the crimson life-blood that flowed from the terrible wounds in the head of the dead man; then he hastened away.

When Rauhen arrived at the "foot," with his lamp on his head, he almost fell over the body of Redmond, and when he saw that he was dead, evidently murdered, a terrible excitement took possession of his mind, and he hardly realized what he did.

Trembling, he drew the body of the dead man upon the carriage, and then he pulled the bell-rope and gave the engineer at the mouth of the mine the signal to ascend. He was himself about to step upon the carriage, when he thought him of his coat and sprang to get it, for the carriage had already begun to ascend, when his hand came in contact with something wet and sticky upon the garment, and raising his hand so that the lamplight rested upon it, he saw with terror and surprise that it was covered with crimson stains of fresh blood!

He turned to get upon the carriage, but he was too late; it was beyond his reach and rapidly rising up the shaft. He could by means of the bell have stopped the carriage and caused it to be lowered again, but in that moment of panic he was so lost all presence of mind, and did not think of the bell until the carriage reached the surface of the earth.

Up, up, rose the carriage, bearing ing its ghastly burden to the light of day, and the tall, lifeless wit-ness against Albert Rauhen, who by his own hand went to testify against him, for the test had been sworn, and the engineer could swear that he had lowered no one save the dead man and Albert Rauhen into the mine that day. No one had remained in the mine over night; for he swore he had drawn up every soul who was in it the day before. The dead man could not have rung the bell, therefore Albert Rauhen must have rung it. The dead man had been killed by another hand than his own; the nature and condition of his wounds proved that fact conclusively. Albert Rauhen was the only man who was in the mine; hence Albert Rauhen must have been the guilty one. Thus reasoned the prosecution when Rauhen was tried for his life, and the defense had rebutted this evidence by showing, by evidence of credible witnesses, that there was another means of entrance into the mine besides the main shaft, and that it was possible for a man to descend into the mine by this route without the knowledge of the engineer.

That entrance was through the air shaft, which was at a distance of two miles from the main shaft, and was descended by stairs. It was never used by the miners, and was only provided in compliance with the mine ventilation law as a way of escape should the main shaft from any cause become impassable, as was the case at Axtondale, where so many brave miners perished like rats in a trap.

Although the defense proved that it was possible for a person to have thus entered the mine, they could not prove that such had been the fact, and therefore it was that Albert Rauhen was found guilty of the awful crime of murder. His blood-stained coat, and his frightened manner, had aided in convicting him. His case was indeed a sad one, for he had been but recently married, and a long and happy life seemed before him.

Now we return to his prison cell.

Albert Rauhen held the vial of prussic acid to his lips, and again for an instant paused. That pause saved him from drinking the poison, for he heard footsteps in the corridor outside his cell, and a voice which was to him the dearest in all the world—the voice of his wife. In a moment he thrust the vial into his pocket and flew to the door, which was presently opened, and his wife came into the cell. The imperiled man and the woman clasped each other in a momentary embrace, and the tears streamed down the cheeks of the fair young girl as she gazed upon the face of him whom she knew she should see no more on earth.

"Albert! Albert!" she exclaimed. "Oh, my darling, my darling! how can we part? How can I give you up?"

He kissed her pale face and strove to speak calm. In the momentary excitement of her arrival he had not observed that the vial of poison had fallen from his pocket upon the floor, but his wife saw it and picked it up. She read the label: "Prussic acid," and then she looked upon her doomed husband with a sorrowful, reproachful glance. She understood it all, and without a word she placed the vial upon the floor, and crushed it beneath her heel into a thousand fragments.

"How could you contemplate such a sin? Oh, Albert, I prayed all last night that you might be saved, and some way, when morning came, a powerful calm came to my heart; and, oh, Albert, I dreamed to me just as though my prayer was answered."

"No, dear, nothing can save me now! To-morrow is the day!"

When the time came for these two loving hearts to part, even the stony-hearted jailer was moved, and he turned away to hide the tears that rushed unbidden to his eyes.

When the wife was gone, the prisoner paced his cell until morning came. When the orb of day rose over the eastern horizon he was led forth to die. With a terrible effort of will he summoned courage, and ascended the gallows with a firm step.

Every act in the awful drama was performed according to custom, and the black cap was drawn over his head, the noose adjusted, and the sheriff was about to spring the trap that would hurl the soul of Albert Rauhen into eternity, when a voice shouted in ear-splitting tones:

"Hold! Hold!"

It was the day before that set for the execution of Albert Rauhen, when, at the fifth riding of the 81. Crois, a terrible mine accident occurred. The tunnel of St. Crois was distant nearly a hundred miles from the town in which Albert Rauhen was to be hanged. The accident to which we refer was an extensive "cave-in" of the White Meadow Mine, and some eight or more miners were killed and many others wounded.

Among those who were fatally injured, and who knew they must surely die, was a strange, reticent man who had only been employed in the White Meadow mine for a few months.

"Are you sure, doctor, that I cannot get well?"

"Yes," replied the doctor, in answer to the miner's question. "No power on earth can save you—you will die."

A look of fear came upon the face of the doomed man.

"I have something to tell you, doctor, and if it is to do poor curs who is doomed to die any good, it must be told at once. You have heard of the Redmond murder case? Well, I am the guilty man! I went down into the mine during the night through the air shaft, and I killed Redmond! Albert Rauhen is innocent!"

It was almost morning when the miner made this confession, and he paused to breathe a moment after the word "innocent," and then he said:

"My true name is Saul Kayth, though I call myself by another name here."

An hour afterward the murderer's soul had gone to answer for his crime at the bar of that great court, above all earthly tribunals of justice—the bar of God.

The doctor had at once dispatched a messenger to the nearest telegraph station, but there had been delay in finding the operator, and when found he experienced difficulty in finding the operator at Walworth. "Click, tick, tick," sounded over and over again, until the messenger, who knew that a human life depended upon the telegram, was almost frantic. But at last a response was made and the dispatch sent.

The person who shouted "Hold!" just as the tragedy was about to be completed, was the messenger with the telegram that declared the innocence of the condemned. The sheriff ran his eye over the message, and in a moment he ordered Albert Rauhen to be set free. Amid the cheers of the crowd he descended from the scaffold, and walked away among his friends.

The joy of his wife was boundless, and even those who were most willing to believe that he murdered the man whom he found dead in the shaft, were now first to offer him congratulations.

Albert Rauhen is an old man now, but when he tells the story of his trial for murder, a prayer of thankfulness always follows it.—N. Y. Weekly.

TO OUR FARMER FRIENDS

Clarksville, Tennessee, Jan. 3rd, 1905.—This crop of tobacco, being of better quality and shorter in average yield, are two reasons for expecting better prices. Besides, full confidence as to the final outcome, may be based upon the wise conclusion of the farmer to prize and put his tobacco in condition to hold for the best demands, only to be found on the open markets. The force of combines, who have ignored open markets in order to fix lower prices in the country is broken, and we predict an era of greater prosperity will come to tobacco growers. The farmers will not regret the move they have made, and the more compact their organization, the greater their influence.

As we have done for the many years past, we solicit the patronage of farmers. As heretofore, our best efforts in their behalf can safely be relied upon. Our warehouse is open day and night, and provided with good, comfortable free quarters for teams and teamsters under the same roof.

GETTING THE IDEA.

There was Cawline. Cawline had a pretty easy time of it once. He drew a fair salary that enabled him to go about where he pleased and enjoy himself generally. He could afford to dress well and treat himself to any little luxury that he fancied. He was a prime favorite, socially, with a badger; and he looked at him now. Not 40 yet and getting as gray as a mackerel; smokes a pipe and wears ready-made clothes, and seedy ones at that; never goes anywhere, except to the office, and shamelessly wheeling a baby carriage on the street. That baby carriage holds the youngest of six, and they too are the youngest of a hard time to get along. Yet Cawline had the cheek to ask Fruder why he didn't marry and settle down. It made Fruder grin.

It was Angelina Schoonmaker who first gave him the glimmering of an idea that there might be another point of view. Angelina was married about three years before. She was a niece of Fruder's—a mighty pretty little girl, too—and Fruder thought it was a pity when he got her married; but he sent her a silver chain and said he thought no more about the matter until he received a letter from Angelina telling him that the baby had been named for him. This time he sent a silver mug.

One afternoon Angelina's husband called at Fruder's office and extorted a promise that he would come to dinner. He went and was pleasantly surprised. It was a nice little dinner. The house Angelina lived in was a very little box of a house. Angelina had not grown the least bit dowdy and she and her husband seemed, without guilting unduly, to be particularly well satisfied with each other. "Decidedly there are exceptions," thought Fruder.

When Frank Junior was brought in in his little pyjamas, rosy from the tub, to say good night, Fruder felt enthusiasm. "By Jove," he said to Angelina's husband, "you people make me envious! I shall have to try this sort of thing myself."

"Don't you think of it," said Angelina.

"What?" said Fruder.

"It wouldn't suit you at all. Would it, James?"

Angelina's husband shook his head. "As far as comfort is concerned you are probably as comfortable as any ever will be," Angelina went on. "You might even be less comfortable if you married. Mightn't he, James?"

"He might, indeed," agreed James, seriously.

"If you had been a marrying man, Uncle Frank, you would have married long ago," pursued Fruder's niece. "I am glad to see you are sensible enough to recognize the fact that you are not a marrying man."

"Too old?" queried Fruder.

"Not that, exactly. You're not so old, you know—but well, some men were meant to marry and some weren't. They may be good and kind and generous—but their part in life is to be godfathers. They make good old fathers, but if they marry they make poor husbands. It's the same with women. There's Carrie Stevens, now, James."

"I know Miss Stevens," said Fruder, absently.

"Well, you know just how lovely and sweet she is. But she will never marry. She isn't a marrying man, I'm glad of it. For I want her always for Little Frank's best aunt. No, I think it is ridiculous to call bachelors selfish. Men don't marry out of a spirit of self-sacrifice, do they, James?"

"I didn't," replied James, emphatically.

"Of course not. You married because you wanted to. If you had not wanted to you would have been an old bachelor and they would have proved you were meant for an old bachelor and you wouldn't have been a bit to blame for it—any more than Uncle Frank here."

"Where is she now?" asked Fruder.

"Who?"

"Carrie—Miss Stevens."

"Oh! Why, she has an apartment in the Ranelagh. I thought she might look in here this evening. She very often does. Where did you meet her, Uncle Frank?"

"So you think I would better not marry, eh?" asked Fruder, changing the subject.

"I think you will be more comfortable as you are."

"There's a big difference between comfort and happiness," observed Angelina's husband.

Fruder smoked a pipe pretty well into the morning after he got home. The tobacco was good and the chair was comfortable. He was comfortably situated altogether in his bachelor quarters. "But," he reflected, "comfort is not happiness exactly." Was he so constituted that he could not acquire comfort to happiness. If so, was he? Would he, a "good bachelor," make such an everlasting failure as a husband? Was he an abnormal creature? Somehow he found no solace in the thought that he was "not to blame." It sounded like an apology for a deformity. He could not resist for the time of the war. He was crippled, poor fellow, but not in the least to blame for it.

The first thing that Fruder did the next morning was to look in the directory. Then he walked into the doctor's next door with an air of determination and selected a magnificent bunch of long-stemmed roses. On the back of his card he wrote: "I shall call this evening. I hope I shall find you at home."

To the doctor, "To Miss Carrie Stevens, apartment 618, 12 Regatta court," he said—Chicago Daily News.

Admiral Togo's Problem.

The problem before Admiral Togo as the Russian Baltic fleet approached the China Sea had become infinitely more complicated and serious than even the result of a great battle between the two fleets. Ever since the first attack on Port Arthur (on Feb. 8 and 9 of last year) Admiral Togo's tactics have been those of a statesman as well as those of a naval commander. Those who have criticized him for closing in on the Russians at Port Arthur and destroying them in a great fight between battleships (and there are many who have thus criticized him severely) have forgotten that old homely proverb which says, "Don't put all your eggs in one basket." The entire Japanese navy is at present in active service under Admiral Togo. He has only five battleships, and it will not be possible within the next year or so for Japan to build another first-class fighting ship. During the war, Admiral Togo and the naval department at Tokyo were in constant communication with Japan at the close of her war with China, and backed up by the combined fleets of Russia, Germany, and France. The island empire wants no more of such "friendly advice," and Admiral Togo has been too shrewd and cautious to risk for the spectacular advantage of an open-sea fight, the right arm of his nation, which alone would command respect in case of a possible European anti-Japanese coalition of the rest of the world.

Therefore, not even for the sake of the dramatic unit, or the news correspondents at the rest of the world, has Admiral Togo been willing to risk his great battleships unnecessarily.—From Progress of the World, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for May.

Both edifices, just completed, are marvels of carving and gilding. Some of the most beautiful specimens of Japanese art, and indeed the greater part of the whole of the exterior of the pagoda were bought by the king from the Japanese section at the last Paris exhibition, and since then his majesty—who takes the greatest interest in his novel erection, superintending every thing—has employed agents to hunt Japan treasures.

Our photographer just taken, given an excellent idea of the beauties of the buildings, though the color scheme is, of course, lost. A double row of railings protects from passer-by the wood of the pavilion, which is of a rich bright brown, and deeply carved. Here and there it is touched with red and black, heightened with gilding, and ornamented with plaques of gilded bronze. The pagoda itself is dark red, relieved with gold and black, and its ruddy-pile-tipped spires, rising above another, some tall, strange tower.

Two large double doors, exquisitely carved, open on each side into a small square hall. That near the park is for public access, that towards the park is the royal entrance.

A short flight of steps on entering, and the visitor turns to find himself in the grand staircase, which occupies the whole of the pavilion. Splendid as are the decorations, the stained glass windows form the special attraction here, being the work of the Frenchman, Jalliat, from designs by the best Japanese artists; this art being one which the Japanese have yet to acquire. They are extremely thick, with much relief, painted, and experts consider their richness and mellowness of coloring but little inferior to that renowned in the church of Jacques at Antwerp. Everywhere there are lotus flowers which serve for electric lamps.

The large hall on the ground floor is a marvel of lacquer and rich decoration. The pillars, which line the walls and form corners, are covered with splendid gilded leather, and there is not an inch of space which is not beautified with lacquered lacquer, carving, or gilded bronze. The ceiling is painted with flowers in roundels on a white ground and the floor is covered with the finest Japanese matting.

The hall on the first floor, if possible, more sacred and more august, is incruited with pearl, ivory, etc., are even more splendid, the carving deeper, the gilded leather more marvellous in its richness. Here, not only covers the pillars, but forms a double frieze. Priceless specimens of Japanese bronzes, etc., have been added and the two service show displays of Japanese processions. The lacquer panels in the corner show a tortoise emerging from the water—the tortoise and a sacred emblem in Japan—and two other figures. These are of the greatest beauty imaginable. The ceiling, too, is wonderful, and, indeed, there is enough to keep a connoisseur in rapt admiration for days. The remaining three stories have not been furnished yet. His majesty is still seeking the Japanese artist to furnish the furniture house, and it is certain that he is presenting to his people yet another gift that is artistically priceless and unique.

LEOPOLD'S PAGODA

AN EXQUISITE JAPANESE STRUCTURE NEAR BRUSSELS

The Beauty and Luxury Loving Monarch Adds Another Gem to His Possessions—Wonders of the Place.

It is at Laeken, and close to the king's palace, near Brussels, that the Japanese pagoda reaches far up into the quiet, moonlit sky of Flanders. It stands on the edge of the royal park, and offers a piquant air of eastern mystery to the beholder, which is a sharp contrast to the promiscuous high-road that skirts it. Its closed door and lattices add to its inscrutableness, and it suggests some lonely stranger who refuses to sing the songs of his native land in a place of exile. But his magnificence and rich coloring give a welcome note of warmth and brightness, and it is so beautiful that no lover of Japanese art should fail to visit it, even though just at present the interior is not open to the public.

When King Leopold first conceived the idea of placing a Japanese pagoda on this spot, he found the rocky site he had chosen so uneven that towards the road great masses of stone have been built up, so as to form a stable and even base for the great structure. Then it seemed too perched as it stood alone to look artistic, and a large pavilion or wing has been added which serves as entrance and staircase to the actual tower.

Both edifices, just completed, are marvels of carving and gilding. Some of the most beautiful specimens of Japanese art, and indeed the greater part of the whole of the exterior of the pagoda were bought by the king from the Japanese section at the last Paris exhibition, and since then his majesty—who takes the greatest interest in his novel erection, superintending every thing—has employed agents to hunt Japan treasures.

THE MEN BEHIND THE GUN.

The Democratic Executive Committee of Christian county is entrusted with the management of party affairs in the county. It has the power to settle any differences in the party that threaten to cause trouble. At its last meeting it undertook to harmonize conflicting interests and prepare for a county ticket. Chas. M. Meacham was endorsed for State Senator, with entire unanimity, all factions for once seeming to agree. This was done in order to get this county out of the way of the county ticket. The action was taken without the solicitation of Mr. Meacham, who did not even attend the meeting of the committee.

The salary of the position is only $600 for four years, and the district was 887 Republican last fall. The nomination at best holds out but little hope of final success. Mr. Joseph E. Moseley was at that time a candidate for sheriff, and worth $20,000 in four years. What has brought about the present disturbance of party harmony? Behind Mr. Moseley's candidacy there are but two issues. One is the personal enmity of Mr. Hunter Wood, Sr., to the man endorsed, (of which more may be said hereafter.) The other is the new-born opposition of Mr. Geo. V. Green and his son-in-law, Col. Ashby Edmunds, to the State administration.

The break between Mr. Green and the State administration is quite recent. Until a few months ago, Mr. Green and Mr. Wood were the personal representatives of Gov. Beckham in this county. Now Mr. Green's hostility toward his former friend knows no bounds. When Meacham's name was first proposed for senator Mr. Green's friends cheerfully assisted in making his endorsement unanimous. There were no factions in the committee. It has been stated that Mr. Moseley's brother on the committee seconded the motion to endorse Meacham. In a few days a committee representing the Wood and Green faction called upon Meacham and asked him if he would pledge himself to vote for Mr. Green for Prison Commissioner and against Dr. Board's confirmation in 1908. He told the committee that his endorsement had come to him unanimously and that he would not ally himself with any faction, that he had no grievances of his own to disturb the party harmony and did not want to take up those of others to lessen his chances in a doubtful district. He was given to understand that he would be forced to "line up" against the "asylum gang" or meet with opposition. The opposition has come, as he was told it would.

These then are the issues to be settled, the personal differences of Wood and Green against Meacham and Board, coupled with Col. Edmunds' struggle with the county committee for political supremacy. As for the personal features, Mr. Meacham is ready for the issue. As

Spring Medicine

There is no other season when good medicine is so much needed as in the Spring.

The blood is impure, weak and impoverished—a condition indicated by pimples and other eruptions on the face and body, by dolent vitality, loss of appetite, lack of strength, and want of animation.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills

Make the blood pure, vigorous and rich, create appetite, give vitality, strength and animation, and cure all eruptions. Have the whole family begin to take them today.

Hood's Sarsaparilla has been used in our family for some time, and always with good results. Last spring I was all run down and got a bottle of it, and an usual result was obtained. Miss BEULAH BORE, Stowe, Vt.

Hood's Sarsaparilla promises to cure and keeps the promise.

For the committee, it represents no party's faction, but, we believe, is looking only to party success. Mr. Moseley says his only motive for running in the face of a party endorsement is to promote harmony. His idea is that the dissatisfied minority outside the committee can be pacified if it is allowed to name a candidate for Senator who is pledged to "line up" with them in their grievances.

Mr. Meacham has as yet entered upon no canvass. He is in the hands of the committee. The committee called upon him to run against a Republican. If it desires him to run against a Democrat questioning its authority and clamoring for a partisan line-up after it has voted not to allow strife in the party, then he is willing to obey the call and let the people vote upon the issues involved. The state administration, the committee and the candidate endorsed can go to the people in a primary or convention with entire confidence that they will never by their votes approve the issue for which Mr. Moseley's sponsors stand, or champion the grievances of those who have been removed from office or who have lost contracts at the asylum.

It is certainly to be hoped that no middle will be developed in the nomination of a Democratic candidate for senator. The county committee has endorsed the candidacy of Mr. Charles M. Meacham, and Equire Joseph E. Moseley has announced his candidacy for the nomination, subject to the action of the party. When Mr. Meacham was endorsed there was no other candidate, and that action seemed entirely proper. But Mr. Moseley's entry into the race puts a new phase upon it. The committee's action ought to be rescinded and the matter referred to the people. The old Democratic doctrine of majority rule ought to be allowed to determine the result. Let us have precinct conventions in which the friends of both candidates may line up and have their noses counted. Then let us all get in line with the choice of the majority and send him to the senate. Factionalism has no place in this contest and every possible effort should be put forth to discourage it. —Pembroke Journal.

There is an easier way than this for the matter to be settled. The committee has notified aspirants for other offices that they must submit their claims to the committee itself. A contest inside a minority party can do only harm. The committee should settle this contest along with the others, or else postpone any action for three or four months, and do nothing to disturb party harmony until more important matters have been attended to. The motives and grievances behind the candidacy of Mr. Moseley are pretty well understood by the people and at the proper time they can be passed upon. Mr. Meacham is willing to let the committee act as it thinks best for the good of the party. Is Mr. Moseley willing to trust to the wisdom of the same authority? If not, let the responsibility of a contest that may jeopardize the success of two county tickets, rest upon him and his friends, who are precipitating a foolish contest in the face of party action already taken by unanimous vote.

The impression seems to be growing that Admiral Togo is already on the defensive and that the Russian fleet, if it desires to do so, will quietly sail around him and proceed on its way to Vladivostok. It is not believed that the Japanese admiral will risk all on a single battle, with only five battleships.

TOUGH PROPOSITION.

How to Keep Husband at Home at Night.

An Indiana daily paper recently offered a prize of $10.00 for the best answer to the question: "How to keep your husband at home at night?" The paper is receiving more letters on the subject than they can find space to publish. The most of the writers agree that a woman should always be bright and cheerful, and greet her hubby with a smile that won't come off. It may be possible for a few angelic wives to be pleasant under any and all circumstances. It is hard to wear a smiling face when one has worried with a sick baby all day, and perhaps burned a finger severely in trying to prepare something nice for husband's supper.

One contestant, in her recipe, says, "Put your husband first at the head of the family." This will do if the husband is qualified for the position. The same writer says, "Keep yourself neat and your home cozy looking." This is good advice. A tidy wife and well ordered attractive home ought to be inducements enough for any good man to remain at home. One woman says: "Don't tell him the troubles of the day and don't be asking him for a new hat."

The farmer's wife doesn't have to ask her husband for a new hat. She can sell a few hens and buy the hat. Nothing like being independent.

"Have his supper ready, the house well lighted and heated when he returns in the evening. After supper have his chair, slippers and daily paper handy," says another loving wife. We would suggest (if your husband is a farmer), subscribing for several good farm papers and have them ready to tempt him to stay at home evenings.

Would say to the girls, marry a farmer and live on the farm if you desire a husband that will stay at home at nights. Few farmers, after the hard exhausting work of the day, care to leave home, mother and babies, or evenings, unless duty calls them. Whatever his calling, the man is a poor excuse if he will not keep himself at home whenever duty will permit without so many inducements. It's all right and proper to make him comfortable, but it seems, from the tone of many of these letters, that many husbands are in danger of being spoiled by too much petting.—Mrs. Fannie Wood, Rich county, Ind., in Inland Farmer.

The Nashville Home Telephone Company was granted a franchise Monday night to operate a telephone in Nashville by a vote of 12 to 9. The franchise was amended by striking out the conduit feature asked for by the Home Company, and to that extent is a partial triumph for the Cumberland Company. The question is now a burning issue in city politics and is by no means settled.

The District Committee at Madisonville Monday, postponed any action in the senatorial race until certain questions involved are passed upon by the State Central Committee next Tuesday in another case from the 12th district.

Historic Orchard Doomed.
Col. John P. Nicholson, of Philadelphia, president of the Gettysburg battlefield park commission, has started condemnation proceedings for the purpose of acquiring possession of the famous "peach orchard." The peach orchard was the scene of terrible fighting during the second and third days of the battle, and it was over this ground that Gen. Sickles, contrary to orders, moved his "Excelsior brigade," and prevented Lee from turning the left flank of the union army. Dr. H. L. Diehl, the owner of the orchard, maintains that, besides the value of the land for farming purposes, it possesses a historical value of at least $400 an acre. The highest amount offered for the commission is $100 per acre.

Japan's Holidays.
Japan has three national holidays. January 1 is one of them and the birth day of the reigning emperor. November 3 is another. But February 11 is the greatest of the three dates, for it is the anniversary of the coronation of the first emperor, Jimmu, who ascended the throne at a place called Kashihara, near the modern town of Nara, five and twenty centuries ago.

NO "TIPS" IN WISCONSIN

Governor Signs Bill to Put End to Gratuities to Employees.

Milwaukee, May 3.—No "tips" can be given in Wisconsin. The anti-grat bill recently passed by the legislature has been signed by Gov. La Follette and the gratuities of any kind can be given to employees of any firm by outsiders without danger of arrest and fine.

While the bill was aimed originally at the practice of paying commissions to employees of large stores or corporations whose interest went a great way in the purchase of goods, it is held that it applies as well to tip giving, and anyone feigning a waiter is just as liable as a person feigning an employer to present to have him recommend the goods of the giver.

Merchants are asking for copies of the law to see just what they are up against. Among minor employees there is consternation lest they be deprived of the tips which in many cases make a large part of their emoluments in lieu of salary.

BLOOD SHED

In the Chicago Strike Trouble—One Man Killed.

Chicago, May 3.—The progress of the teamsters' strike in Chicago was marked yesterday by savage fighting, and during the day one man was killed and many were injured.

In several cases men walking along the streets with no interest in the strike were attacked by hoodlums and severely beaten. In one instance a minister was assaulted. Judge Kohlsaat issued a temporary injunction on the petition of the express companies, restraining all persons from interfering with wagons or employees. The Employer's Association has failed to secure the co-operation of the Team Owners' association against the teamsters, the team owners refusing to deliver any coal to any firm where a strike is in progress. The railroad men, who were relied upon to aid in influencing the team owners, have declined to be drawn into the controversy.

Linevitch Greets His Men and Salutes Them With a Kiss.

Gunshe Pass, Manchuria, May 2.—A touching incident occurred during the Easter Celebration here. After the morning service all the troops in the region around headquarters were drawn up in line before Gen. Linevitch's tent, and the Command-in-Chief came out, greeted the troops and passed down the line, saluting each and every soldier with a kiss. All the men were much moved and many of them wept. The incident served to increase their boundless worship of the old, gray leader.

Gen. Linevitch continues energetically the reorganization of the various departments of the armies.

CRUDE OIL.

Money is made by keeping a barrel of Crude Oil on hand and using it on your hogs, and feed that you give them. It will cause your hogs to grow and prevent cholera and other diseases. If your hogs have scurvy, cold, flesh-eats, or sprains, Crude Oil is the cheapest and best thing you can use. If your hen-house has mites in it saturate it with Crude Oil and you will soon be rid of them. If you have fies to build Crude Oil is the best and cheapest killing you can get. If your barn has fleas in it, use Crude Oil and you will soon have no fleas. Fence posts saturated with this oil before setting will last fully twice as long. To give some idea as to the beneficial results its use among hog producers, I will say that in the years of 1897-8 I fed and handled about two thousand hogs in a lot of 12 acres situated on a hill and containing a pond and spring, and when needed I would empty a barrel of oil in the pond, and the hogs would immediately rush into it and shortly afterwards shed off, looking like different hogs. I never lost a solitary hog out of the whole number from any kind of disease. Price of Oil.—Per barrel $3; or five barrels for $12.50. f. o. b. cars. Send check with order and it will be received prompt attention. Address L. W. PRESTON, Glasgow, Ky.

STATE CENTRAL

Committee to Meet in Frankfort May 9.

Frankfort, Ky., May 3.—The Democratic State Central Committee will meet at the Capitol Hotel here at noon on Tuesday, May 9, next.

The purpose of the meeting is to consider a question presented by Charles Sommers, of Hardin county, chairman of that county, and of the senatorial district committee of the district composed of Hardin, Bullitt and Grayson counties, as to the legality of a nomination held for State Senator made by a convention held in one county of a district; also to approve recommendations to be made of committeemen in Covington and Newport. Other small matters of which the chairman has not yet been notified, may be called up and disposed of.

The question presented by Mr. Sommers grows out of the calling of a county convention for Hardin county in August next to select the nominee for State Senator for that district. The Hon. W. W. Tabb, of Hardin, the only announced candidate for the nomination at the time of the District Committee's action, favored a primary election either in the whole district or in Hardin county, but the committee called a convention, and in its call designated Mr. Sommers to act as temporary chairman. The Hon. George K. Holbert, of Hardin, entered the race shortly thereafter, and there soon followed a demand for a primary election in the whole district. The Grayson county committee and Democrats are strongly urging it, and Mr. Tabb's friends insist on either a primary in Hardin county or in the three counties. Mr. Sommers contends that by primary election in one county a nomination for the district cannot legally be made.

Under the agreement of rotation, it is Hardin county's time to furnish the nominee for Senator, and it is probable that the State Committee will either direct a primary in the whole district, with only Hardin county candidates, or a primary in Hardin county. There will be no contest over the approval of committeemen in Covington and Newport.

FRISCO SYSTEM WILL GO BY PADUCAH.

Information From The Registrar, Important If Correct.

HEADED FOR JOPPA.

Will Use the Lines of the I. C. From Here to Paducah.

Good news to all Paducahans will be the fact that reliable information points to the great Frisco railroad system coming through here in opening its lines from St. Louis to Nashville and the southeast, and that contracts to get the road over the route are already being entered into, says the Registrar.

The Frisco line controls the Chicago and Eastern Illinois railroad which has its terminus at Joppa, eighteen miles below this city on the Ohio river. It is also generally understood that they have bought the Tennessee Central railroad, which runs from Hopkinsville, Ky., down to Nashville and then on over through eastern Tennessee. Now the road wants to form a link that will connect the C. & E. I. terminal at Joppa with the Tennessee Central at Hopkinsville. Looking towards this end it is reliable reported that they have arranged with the Illinois Central to use the latter's tracks from this city to Hopkinsville where they get into the Tennessee Central tracks. To get from here to opposite Joppa the Frisco is preparing to build a stretch of track, while they have already signed contracts with a steamboat company to transfer their trains from Joppa over to the Kentucky side of the river and onto the rails for the new and short division to be run from here to a point opposite the Joppa terminal. The contract about this transferring is a sure thing as a prominent citizen of Paducah while visiting his son last week at a certain city was informed by the latter that he, the son, had seen himself the contract entered into between the Frisco and transfer boat company, whereby the latter was to take trains back and forth across the river. The son is in a position to know, and he says the deal is a sure go, although the higher officials are keeping movements quiet and under cover until everything is fully decided upon.

Passage of the line through this city will be a great thing to the commercial interests of Paducah and everybody will hail with much pleasure its coming. It means that the road will have to have a depot, unless it uses the Union depot, while yards, terminals, etc. will also have to be laid out and constructed. The Frisco for a while was contemplating going through Evansville in opening its line from St. Louis to Atlanta, but things are beginning to look very favorable to Paducah.

GOTHAM LETTER

Written by One Who Got Bride in Hopkinsville.

New York, April 29.—Editor Kentuckian: As we have been reading your much esteemed paper for several months and having often seen the name of your business manager, Mr. Bartley, most prominently mentioned in our home paper, the Orange, Va., Observer, once his home, we thought we would write you a few items from Gotham. Doubtless you have met the able editor of the Observer, Mr. R. N. Robinson.

"The Palmetto," 5 Ave New York City, April 29, 1905.

While far away from home I always love to read our home paper each week, and as our memory floats down the dim vista of the past the scenes of our boyhood and schooldays grow dearer as the years glide on. How well do we remember a callow youth undergoing the hazing at William and Mary's College and the University of Virginia.

The political pot has begun to boil again in New York and this fall will be quite an exciting time, but, of course, Tammany will win and should win, for under her regime things are more prosperous and money more plentiful.

The spring season for business was late, and was not as good as last year.

The summer resorts are opening up, and especially Coney Island, which has no rival on earth. We visited that pleasure resort and the attractions this year are grand. "Luna Park," which has many attractions, such as "A Trip to the Moon," "The Japanese Village," and a continuous circuit, and Dreamland, another famous resort with "Boatload of Wild Animals," and the "Child Incubator," "The Streets of Cairo," "The Bowery," "Loop the Loop," and many other attractions too numerous to mention, which are wonders of the age.

A trip up the Hudson River which rivals the Rhine, is quite a fun for pleasure seekers on excursions on Sundays.

While we are quite a stranger in your city and to the good people there, yet what little we saw of the town and people we liked very much while there (for so short a space) for our visit was almost as short as young Lochinvar's which Scott speaks of so beautifully in Marmion.

We regret to hear of the loss of Vanderbilt College in Nashville. We recall many pleasant memories of our stay there and that old Maxwell Hotel. The South that we love so well still abounds in hospitality and when we use that word we well know that the latch string is always on the outside to stranger and friend alike. In closing, Mr. Editor, while in this large city where life is lived so fast and great questions of moment lose their sight of action, we will quote a few lines from the Ode of Horace:

"Alas, alas, my Posthumous how the fleeting years glide on, even virtue cannot stay the ravages of time, and wasting age and death that overcome us all."

Yours truly,

GOVERNOR'S WIFE LAID TO REST IN CEMETERY

Was a Lexington Girl Who Died at Twenty-Five Years of Age.

MRS. CHAS. MOREHEAD.

Other Noted Pioneers Who Sleep the Last Sleep In Westside Graveyard.

In the southeastern corner of the old Westside Cemetery, with her headstone still well preserved, lies the body of a young woman who was the first wife of a brilliant young lawyer who afterwards became Governor of Kentucky. As a girl she was Miss Amanda Leavy, a daughter of William Leavy, of Lexington, Ky. She was born in 1804 and died in 1829.

Chas. S. Morehead was born in Nelson county, Ky., July 7, 1802 and his education was completed at Transylvania University, Lexington, Ky., from which he graduated with honors. He came at once to Hopkinsville and located for the practice of law. In a few years he returned to Lexington to claim as his bride the young girl who is buried here. He rose rapidly as a lawyer and politician and was elected to the legislature in 1828 and re-elected in 1829, receiving almost the unanimous vote of the county. His young wife died while he was serving his second term and he did not return to Hopkinsville, but located in Frankfort. He was Attorney General in 1832, and in 1838 was again elected to the legislature from Franklin county and re-elected several times. He was elected Speaker in 1841 and served three terms. In 1847 he was elected to Congress and served till 1851. After one more term in the legislature, he was elected Governor in 1855 on the Know-Nothing ticket, by 4,403 majority over Beverly L. Clark. In 1859 he moved to Louisville and was a delegate to the "Peace Conference" in Washington in February, 1861. He was arrested and thrown into prison for several months on a charge of sedition, but was allowed to return to Kentucky in January, 1862. Learning that he was to be arrested again, he fled to Canada and subsequently to Europe. After the close of the war he located at Greenville, Miss., on a plantation, where he died December 22, 1868. A large fortune was swept away by the war and he died poor.

James H. McLaughlin.

James H. McLaughlin and his wife, Sarah C. McLaughlin, were buried near the southern edge of the cemetery. The headstone of the latter still remains, but that of the pioneer has disappeared. It is said that many of these slabs have been removed and put to various uses, during the forty years that the cemetery was an abandoned briar field.

Jas. H. McLaughlin was the second clerk of the circuit court, really the first one, for his predecessor had served but one year as pro tempore clerk without a commission as clerk. He entered upon his duties March 4, 1804, and was a faithful and efficient officer and his records are still enduring monuments to his fitness for the place. They are, after 101 years, still models of neatness and are written in a clear and legible hand. He was one of seven lawyers licensed at the first court held in the county and was a man of liberal education. Joseph Duncan, his nephew, who was a deputy in his office, afterwards became Governor of Illinois and a famous soldier and politician.

Mr. McLaughlin served as clerk for many years and was succeeded by Nathan S. Dallam. The family is no longer represented in this section.

Cock.

In the extreme western end of the cemetery is the grave of Ephriam Cock, who was born in 1763 and died in 1838. As he was 23 years old when the war of the Revolution began, it is almost certain that he was a soldier in that struggle. Reference is made in Perrin's History to Col. John W. Cocke, of Virginia, who came to this county in 1820 and built a mill on Little River that cost $10,000 and bought 3000 acres of land. One of the leading roads out of the city is still called the Cocke's Mill road. This may be a kinsman of the Colonel, but we can find out nothing definite. There are now no families bearing this name near to Hopkinsville than Robertson county, Tenn.

The year that Mr. Cock was buried was a memorable one in the history of Hopkinsville. The Cherokee Indians were transferred from Georgia to the Indian Territory and 30,000 of them passed through Hopkinsville in detachments of 1,200, with all their live stock, crossing the Ohio at Golconda. The old and infirm were carried in wagons and on horseback. All were escorted by soldiers. Hopkinsville was one of the supply stations and detachments passed every 48 hours, occupying in turn a camp on the east bank of Little River, near Cat's Mill. Many of the Indians were civilized and there were numerous deaths in the camp here. Two of the principal chiefs, Fly Smith and Whitepath, were among those who died and they were buried on the river bank with impressive ceremonies and eloquent funeral orations were delivered by Indian orators in the presence of a great crowd.

York.

Near the center of the cemetery, under a towering forest tree, side by side are the graves of Benjamin York and his wife Malinda York. They died the same month, August 1825, and the date, somewhat effaced, seems to be the same on both headstones. Benjamin York, Sr., was one of the earliest settlers. He was a blacksmith, in those days an indispensable factor in the life of every community, for even the nails were made by the blacksmith. David Saffarans was the tinsmith of the town and both reared families. When quite young Benjamin York, Jr., and Malinda Saffarans were married, and two little sons came to bless their humble home—Jim and John. Then in the summer of 1825, when the one was 25 and the other 20 years of age, both parents sickened and died. The boys grew up in the town with their grandparents and are well remembered by some of the older citizens. Many years ago they left Hopkinsville and nobody here knows where their descendants now live, for it living themselves they are now more than 80 years of age.

Hopson.

Nevil Hopson, who died in 1835, was one of the early members of the Methodist church. His wife, Susan Hopson, survived her husband fifteen years. They are buried side by side near the center of the lot.

Benj. W. Patton.

In his day Benjamin W. Patton was one of the leading lawyers of Western Kentucky. He was born in Clark county, Ky., in 1788 and died in this city in 1825, one year before Robt. P. Henry, another brilliant young lawyer, whose grave is not thirty feet from his, passed away. He was liberally educated and a graduate in law when he came to this city and soon acquired a brilliant reputation as a strong and successful lawyer. He was an eloquent orator. David S. Patton, his brother, read law with him and in 1820 started the Kentucky Republican, the first paper published in Hopkinsville. He served in the legislature from 1820 to 1834 and afterwards moved to Paducah, where he died in 1837.

Mrs. Margaret S. Patton, wife of Benjamin Patton and Mrs. Ann Patton, wife of William Patton, both of whom died young, are buried in the Patton lot.

Man's Unreasonableness

Is often as great as woman's, but Thos. S. After taking Electric Blisters she was perfectly cured and can now perform all her household duties." Guaranteed by R. C. Hardwick, druggist; price 50c.

Concerning Some Street Suits

SPRING GOWNS.

CHECKS are more prominent than they have been in years. They are just what is enough for her that can buy a suit devoted strictly to utility and does not have to plan to make one costume do service on various kinds of occasions. Checks are a relief from the one-toned cloths, and many show this season are very attractive, but as a rule they can be worn so long as plain goods, the wearer much sooner wearying of the fancier material.

When it comes to the checked silks of the season, one must confess they are unusually pleasing; checks and hair lines and dots, all of an artistic jumble of color. Checked silks will rival the shot silks this summer; one dare not say as yet which will be winner.

The checked wools all come in fine smooth cloth, no rough surfaces are seen. One excellent model is of gray light-weight wool with narrow lines of black marking off checks; the trimming gives style, plings of black and white silk on the jacket, the waistcoat of blue silk embroidered in pinkish blues and browns. The skirt is a very plain, plaited about the hips.

Another good checked model was a Panama cloth of green and blue. The little coat was trimmed with shavings of green silk, the green silk waistcoat was embroidered in blues and greens, with little touches of black here and there. This suit should be worn with a green silk petticoat and a bit of style would be added by a parasol of the same verdant hue.

Checks and plaid have brought the circular skirt again into favor. And dressmakers find that the desired here is given very well by the circular cut. The sensible separate walking-skirt will be of smooth-faced check, and worn with a trim little bolero will make a very fetching utility suit.

What to Wear in the Evening

ANYTHING, so it is light-colored, light-weight, has a low neck and short sleeves. In the matter of décolleté we are copying more and more after our English sisters, to whom "evening dress" means arms and shoulders bare.

A pretty design is here illustrated. The bodice is made of rose mouseline de soie, has very full short puffs for sleeves, the neck is square both back and front. The trimming of ruchings and bands of ribbon makes this very effective, and also it is easily fashioned. One of the new embroidered ribbons may be used, or a velvet ribbon of a little deeper rose than the corsage.

In choosing materials remember that color by day and the same under artificial light are often very different matters, so different as to make the change from becoming to unbecoming. Colors bright under an artificial light that one may know just what the appearance will be on the occasions for which designed.

About wearing the hair: those that have a goodly quantity of woman's glory should wear it done low—that is, if at all becoming that way. The best style at present, we should say, give the low culture. To some faces the fashion is very trying, and should be shunned without hesitation. Perhaps there never was a period when more liberty was allowed in the matter of hair dressing; and though the low, flat manner is much to the fore, the soft, moderate pompadour still has a number of followers. The part in the middle continues in high favor.

Bracelets and necklaces are in evidence, old and new fashioned turquoise and amethyst have come back to favor, and one sees beautiful pendants and chains of these.

Many a woman will surely be glad to hear that the separate waist is no longer ashamed to show itself, that Paris is sending over lovely old blouses. All through the summer we are to have all infinite variety of white waists sported by the well-dressed girl. Just now the stores are showing some very pretty dotted Swiss ones, and a great many of sheer laces trimmed with eyes, net, embroidery, Chantilly lace, and the like, and those trimmed with val-

MY LADY'S HEALTH.

DOUBTLESS health is beyond price, and it is the most desirable thing to have. We will not say to show you how this great blessing may be cultivated or acquired without wealth. What if it that wealth some of our young American women two of Nature's beauties, and those who want to have clear, bright eyes and rosy-red cheeks and a opportunity of being in the spring. More important than all this, however, is the young woman or middle-aged woman starts with a healthy womanly system. If she is dragged down or suffers greatly at stated periods, she is bound to have that dragged-out, worn-out look which goes with weakness. But this is not difficult to cure, because a physician, who makes a specialty of diseases of women, has given to the world a medicine which is absolutely a cure for these weaknesses. We mean Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It stands alone as a medicine which has been tested and recommended for the last thirty-eight years. It stands alone as the only medicine now on the market which is guaranteed to contain no alcohol or narcotics of any kind.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" brought me safety through that difficult period called change of life. I had hot and cold flashes, sick headaches, became excited, irascible, nervous and terrible. My appetite was ruined and for days I was unable to eat a fair meal. My aunt recommended me to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and I made a great change for the better. After two weeks the unpleasant feelings had disappeared. I have a pleasant and dignified appearance so have the care of a large family but was able to attend to my household duties without any difficulty and passed the period with-out any more trouble. I can recommend your "Favorite Prescription" as a grand medicine for women. Mrs. Mary Thompson, 344 E. Ankeny St., Portland, Oregon.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets clear the complexion and sweeten the breath, they cleanse and regulate the stomach, liver and bowels and produce permanent benefit and do not react on the system. One is a genuine laxative. Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, in paper covers, is sent free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

TRANSATLANTIC RACE

CONTEST BY BIG YACHTS FOR KAISER'S GOLD CUP.

Fourth International Event is to Take Place in May—Start to Be Made from New York City.

Even in the building and sailing of yachts the American people take front rank, and judging from the successive attempts made to win the America's cup they are able to give points to the maritime powers of the old world that have been sailing the high seas for centuries.

The American always goes in to win and in the coming transatlantic race, which will start from Sandy Hook lightship on May 15, next, there is good prospect that some one of the half dozen or more American yachts entered will carry off the coveted prize. The race will start at the Lizard on the English coast. It will be the fourth transatlantic race and the third started from the New York side of the ocean.

Two Englishmen, one a lord and the other an earl, an association of Germans, and five Americans have so far formally registered their intention to win, if possible, this imperial favor. At least three more Americans are expected to enter the fleets.

Peculiar interest is given the long sailing contest by the fact that Emperor William who is passionately fond of the sport, has offered a magnificent gold cup, said to be worth $5,000 as a prize to the winner.

Last summer the announcement was made that the race would be sailed during the coming May under the auspices of the Imperial Yacht club of Kiel and, to represent that club in this country, a committee was appointed consisting of Commander Hebbenhaus, naval attaché of the German legation at Washington, chairman; Allison V. Armour, of New York and Chicago, and C. L. F. Robinson, of Newport. The cup was intrusted to the keeping of Mr. Armour, who in Germany, who brought it to this country in August on his yacht Utowana.

The race was originally limited to sail and auxiliary yachts of more than 100 tons, American register, but that condition was recently modified so as to admit yachts of 80 tons. The auxiliary yachts will be propelled only by sail. Their screws must be unshipped before the start and carried aboard or transported in other vessels.

The aspirants for the cup and the yachts they have entered are: Earl of Crawford, Valhalla; Lord Brassey, Sunbeam; Hamburgischer Verein Segelboot (Hamburg) Seafaring society, Hamburg; Allison V. Armour, Utowana; Edmund Randolph, Apache; Wilson Marshall, Atlantic; Robert E. Tod, Thistle; Henry A. Redmond, Albatross. The latter is a yawl. All the others are schooners except the Valhalla, which is ship rigged and the Apache, which is back rigged. All are auxiliaries except the Hamburg, Thistle and Albatross. The Earl of Crawford and Lord Brassey are well-known English yachtsmen; the Hamburg society is an association that has been conspicuous in training amateur German yachtsmen. Mr. Armour, a member of the well-known American racing firm, is a member of the New York Yacht club who in the last two or three seasons has won a number of races with his schooner in Germany and in England.

Watering Mr. Randolph, a son of E. D. Randolph, the well-known banker, himself a prominent Wall street broker, was for years a member of the Corinthian crew of the old stoop Gracie. He embarked on the sea of large yacht ownership about a year ago. Mr. Marshall, prominent for years as a racing yachtsman and deep sea cruiser, was the winner last season of both the Brenton's Reef and Cape May cups.

The first transatlantic yacht race was sailed in December, 1866, by the Henrietta, Meeting and Vesta, and won by the Henrietta; time, 13 days 22 hours 46 minutes. The second race was between the Cambria and Dauntless, in 1870, from Dantz's Rock, at the entrance to Cork harbor, Ireland, to Sandy Hook. The Cambria won in 23 days 5 hours 17 minutes. The third race was from Owl's Head, New York harbor, to Roche's Point, Queenstown, Ireland, and won by the Coast and Dauntless, in March, 1887. The Coast won the winner, and her time was 14 days 19 hours 3 minutes and 14 seconds.

CHAT OFF THE BAT.

The games of ball between the second nine of Hopkinsville and Madisonville resulted in a draw. Madisonville won the first and Hopkinsville the last. The third of the series will be played here at an early date.

The Sun says many of the factories and stores at Vincennes will close today to let their employees attend the opening game of the baseball season between Princeton and Vincennes.

Rube Whitley has failed to make good with Providence, R. I., and may wear the Vincennes uniform in the K. I. T.

It is predicted that a larger crowd will see the Indians and Hopkinsville lads open the season at Wallace park than on any opening since league ball was started in Paducah. Many stores and factories will close early Thursday afternoon for the game.—News-Democrat.

The locals went over to Clarksville Tuesday and played the Clarksville team, lending the Tennessee Schan as a catcher. Brown and Lemon were the pitchers and tied the score 6 to 6 in the fourth inning. Pettifer was then put in in place of Brown and there was a furious contest lasting throughout eleven more innings, in which neither side scored. At the end of the fifteenth inning the game was declared a tie.

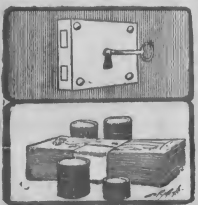

The new uniforms arrived Monday morning. They are gray with red caps, stockings and belts and the word Henderson in big letters across the shirt front.—Gleaner.

The Gleaner says of Henderson's new catcher, DeWeese: "Mains is a fine and dandy first sacker. DeWeese is a dandy catcher and the pitchers like his work. With two such catchers and both of them able to cover first base, the team is much stronger than before the new man arrived."

Rigg's Assessment.

Frankfort, Ky., May 2.—The State Board of Equalization today passed finally on the assessment of the property in the country of Trigg. It determined that a raise of 8 per cent. should be placed upon the assessed value of farm lands and personally subject to equalization, and the local assessment of town lots be accepted. The total assessed value of property in Trigg was reported to the board as being $2,446,057, a decrease of $95,856 from the equalized valuation of last year. The value of farm land was given in at $1,553,560, and the average price per acre $6.05. The raise of 8 per cent. increases the total valuation of land to $1,677,844, and the average price per acre to $6.53.
